Voice From Past Accuses Quisling

STANDING impassively in court, Vidkun Quisling yesterday heard his own recorded voice help to condemn him. From loudspeakers behind the judges' bench came his orders to the Norwegian people in a broadcast on April 9th, 1940.

"Norwegian men and women, now that England has broken Norway's neutrality by laying mines in our territorial waters," came the voice. The court listened in tense silence, while Quisling stood impassive.

As the broadcast concluded, with a warning to officials and officers of the Norwegian Army and Navy to obey his commands, the judge asked Quisling, "Was that your voice we heard?" In low tones, and with some hesitation, Quisling answered, "There can, I suppose, be no doubt."

Albert Hagelin, Quisling's former 63-year-old agent in Germany, and his Minister of Commerce, pleaded loss of memory when cross-examined as a vital prosecution witness. Brought from Moellegarten Prison Hospital, Hagelin declared that he had been under medical treatment for loss of memory since 1944. With his eyes fixed on the ground, he replied either with flat denials or a mumbled "I can't remember, I can't remember."

Reminded of a letter written on Quisling Party notepaper to an associate in Germany, which stated that if his advice had been followed the pro-English Marxist Government would never have been able to leave Oslo, Hagelin examined the letter slowly, and said, "I don't remember this letter." He admitted the signature was his.

Hagelin refused to answer a yes or no when asked whether he confirmed testimony about his talks with Hitler, Rosenberg, and other Germans. When asked how he got £25,000 to £30,000 out of Germany, he answered: "When the Jews were taking millions, why shouldn't I do the same?"

German Gestapo officers, who had been responsible for the execution of Norwegian patriots and Jews, testified, and said much of the responsibility for maltreatment of the Jews rested on Quisling. One of them said that the Norwegian State Police, Quisling's own Gestapo, had the reputation of being even worse than the German Gestapo.

A 66-year-old Chamberlain to King Haakon gave evidence of the damage done to the Royal Palace. He said that the Queen's bedroom had been turned into a guardroom for Quisling's guards, who had completely destroyed much of the valuable furniture and oak panelling. The Royal Chapel had been used for stores, he said, and he alleged that Quisling had stolen many valuables, including linen and precious silver plate, which was melted down and sold on the black market.

Trade Mission Sees Mr. de Valera

Mr. E. Thomas, President of the National Foreign Trade Council of New York, and Mr. N. Sargent, Secretary, National Association of Manufacturers, New York, who are on a trade mission in Dublin, were received by the Taoiseach at Government Buildings yesterday. They were accompanied by Senator F. M. Summerfield, Mr. J. J. O'Leary, and Mr. F. H. O'Donnell. They talked with the Taoiseach for about an hour.

LEND-LEASE SUDDENLY ENDS

Labour Government's First Financial Crisis

"THE sudden cessation of a support on which our war organisation has so largely depended has put us in a very serious position," said Mr. Attlee, the Prime Minister, in the House of Commons yesterday, when announcing the termination of the Lend-Lease Act.

The President of the United States, he said, had issued a direction ordering the cancellation of outstanding lend-lease contracts, and providing that stocks and deliveries procured under the Act must be paid for in cash or credit, arrangements to be negotiated.

The Prime Minister added that the United States Treasury representative in Washington had received a letter from the Foreign Office Administrator inviting Great Britain to enter into immediate conversations to work things out in a manner that would best promote their mutual interests.

"There is, however, an indication of a possible limited range of lend-lease for military purposes," Mr. Attlee added. "The system of lend-lease in the United States and mutual aid from Canada, and the accumulation of sterling by the sterling area countries has been an integral part of the war organisation of the Allies. In this way it had been made possible for us in this island to mobilise our domestic man-power for war, with an intensity unsurpassed elsewhere, and, at the same time, to undertake expenditure abroad for the support of military operations over a widely extended area, without having to provide exports to pay for our imports of food and raw materials, or to provide the cash we were spending abroad. The very fact that this was the right division of effort between ourselves and our Allies leaves us, however, far worse off when the sources of assistance dry up than it leaves those who have afforded us that assistance.

"If the rôle assigned to us has been to expand our exports so as to provide a large margin over our current needs which we could furnish free of charge to our Allies, we should, of course, be in an immeasurably stronger position than we are to-day. We had not anticipated that operations under the lend-lease Act would continue for any length of time after the defeat of Japan, but we had hoped that the sudden cessation of this great mutual effort, which has contributed so much to victory, would not have been effected without consultation and prior discussions of the different problems involved in the disappearance of a system of so great range and complication.

SERIOUS POSITION

"We can, of course, only demobilise and re-convert gradually, and the sudden cessation of a support on which our war organisation has so largely depended put us in a very serious financial position.

"Excluding altogether the munitions which we have been receiving under lease-lend and Canadian mutual aid, which will be no longer required, our overseas outgoings on the eve of the defeat of Japan were equivalent to expenditure at the rate of about two thousand million pounds a year, including essential food and other non-munition supplies, which were received hitherto under lease-lend, but must now be paid for.

"Towards this total in the present year, 1945, our exports are contributing £350,000,000, and certain sources of income, mainly temporary, such as the receipts from the United States forces in this country and reimbursements from the Dominions for war expenditure which we have incurred on their part, are £450,000,000. Thus the initial deficit with which we start the task of re-establishing our own economy and of contracting our overseas commitments is immense."

THE CONVERSATIONS

In announcing the invitation to enter into negotiations with the United States to discuss the situation, Mr. Attlee said:—"I am, therefore, inviting Lord Halifax to return to Washington, accompanied by Lord Keynes, and Mr. Brand and officials of the other departments, to take part in such conversations. Reciprocal aid on the part of the United Kingdom, or reverse lease-lend as it is sometimes called, which, according to the reciprocal aid agreement with the United States Government, is provided on the same terms as lend-lease aid, will, of course, conform to the same dates of partial or complete termination as lend-lease.

"I much hope the President will accept arrangements by which shipping and food, and any other supplies still required by our forces overseas, and by the American forces overseas, can continue to be furnished for a limited period under the lend-lease and reciprocal aid agreement.

"It would seem reasonable to regard such supplies and services arising out of the war as belonging to the common war effort, and, as I have said, there is an indication in the communication that has reached us that the American Administration may so regard them. I earnestly hope that the House, in view of the fact that negotiations on these complicated issues are about to start, will agree that the matter should not be the subject of debate to-day."

President Had No Option

THREE members of the United States Congress Foreign Affairs Committee, on a visit to Europe to consider lend-lease, the work of U.N.R.R.A., and other problems, gave a Press conference in London yesterday before leaving for Russia, Bulgaria and other countries.

Mr. Karl E. Mundt, of South Dakota, said that he did not think President Truman could have done anything else but end lend-lease. It was the law of America that when the war in Europe and the Far East ended lend-lease should be terminated.

"It has nothing whatever to do with a blow against your new Government," Mr. Mundt said. "Your Government knew that lend-lease would automatically come to an end when there was peace."

Mr. Mundt said that, if feasible, the Committee would favour an interim arrangement for continuing supplies, and he was pretty sure shipments would continue, although tapered off, and supplies sent on an indeterminate basis and in reduced quantities.

Mr. Mundt said that U.N.R.R.A. had not come up to the expectations hoped for in America, but he would not say it was a complete and utter failure.

"We have seen more personnel of U.N.R.R.A. in London than in the countries where they are needed."

The organisation of U.N.R.R.A. must be improved, he added.

Cuts in Tobacco And Food

Britain's supplies of American films, tobacco from Virginia, and chopped ham, will be affected by the Premier's announcement yesterday that America has shut down on lend-lease and, from now on, Britain must pay for all goods, even if they are already on the way to Britain. This cut is an inevitable consequence of the new situation that confronts Britain, the Press Association's Lobby Correspondent says.

The delegation to Washington, although it will explore the position, will not be authorised to make any decisions binding Britain. Its function will be to report back to the Government for action.

Mr. Churchill Asks House To Exercise Restraint

Mr. Churchill, speaking after the Prime Minister, said:

"The very grave and disquieting statement which the Prime Minister has just made must overshadow our minds. I agree with him entirely that if a debate of a discursive character arises before the issues have been properly weighed by the House it might easily be detrimental to our national interests, which always must claim the allegiance of members wherever they sit, and I think I can give him an assurance on behalf of the members who are associated with me on this side of the House that we should not touch upon this matter in the forthcoming debate on the adjournment.

"Words might be said and phrases used which would hamper the task of our negotiators in the difficult matters which lie before them. I think the utmost restraint should be practised, not only in the House but, if I may say so, also outside its doors in all comments on the American situation at the present moment. I cannot believe this is the last word of the United States. I cannot believe that so great a nation, whose Lease-Lend policy was characterised by me as the most unsordid Act in the history of the world, would proceed in such a rough and harsh manner as to hamper a faithful ally—an ally who held the fort while their own American armaments were prepared, to place that ally—

Mr. Campbell Stephen (I.L.P., Camlachie)—"That is not helping any."

Mr. Churchill—"I think we might have co-operation from the hon. member who seats himself in such an unsuitable position."

Mr. Churchill added—"I hope, indeed, that this very great burden and strain will be eased as a result of the discussions which are proceeding, and I give my support to the Prime Minister in the request which he has made to the House."

"Britain Must Have Known"

The Foreign Economic Administrator, Mr. Crowley, stated in Washington yesterday that responsible officials of the British Government "must have recognised that lend-lease would have to be discontinued after the Japanese war, and could not be used as part of Britain's post-war rehabilitation and reconversion programme," an Associated Press telegram stated last night.

Commenting on Mr. Attlee's statement, that the sudden end of lend-lease would put Britain in a serious financial position, Mr. Crowley said, in an interview: "I had no discretion under the law, and, under promises made to the Congress of the United States, the late President Roosevelt, Mr. Truman, as Vice-President, and I repeatedly stated that lend-lease could not be used for post-war rehabilitation."

Mr. Crowley said that, if promises to Congress and the American people had been broken, "it might have jeopardised the whole future of the authority we would need to have in dealing with economic aid for those countries."

OFFER TO BRITAIN

He referred reporters to his testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in July, when he said that lend-lease would be used "only in connection with the defence of the United States and the effective prosecution of the war to final victory."

"The question is not the sudden ending of lend-lease, but the sudden ending of the Japanese war," he added. Other nations whose economy had been sharply affected by the end of lend-lease have accepted the decision, and are co-operating with us in working the matter out."

Mr. Crowley said that the United States had done everything possible within the law to cushion the impact resulting from the quick termination of Lend-Lease shipments. Facilities of the Export-Import Bank had been offered to Britain in an effort to give her sufficient dollars to continue outstanding orders placed under Lend-Lease.

"We also offered them an opportunity to obtain lend-lease shipments stockpiled here, or in the pipeline, or even in process of manufacture after V-J Day, under conditions that they pay for them over a 30-year period at two and three-eights per cent. interest."

He said, that, in addition, the Foreign Economic Administration offered to continue its procurement machinery now in operation, so as not to disturb the even flow of goods.

"What more could be done, I don't know," Mr. Crowley added, "if our promise to Congress and the American people who appropriated 40 billion dollars (£10,000,000,000) for Lend-Lease was to be kept."

Dublin Views On Trade With America

THE proposal put forward by two American business men in Dublin on Thursday, for a trade agreement between this country and the United States, has been received with caution in Dublin commercial circles.

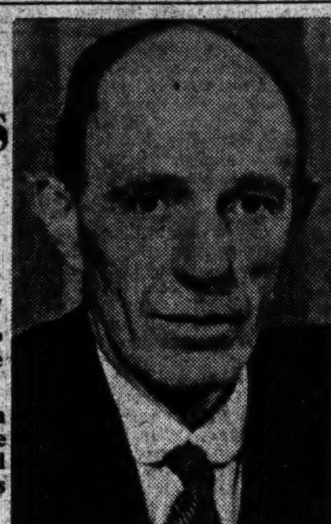

Senator F. M. Summerfield, past President of the Federation of Irish Manufacturers, said that this visit indicated that American manufacturers, like their counterparts in Eire, were eager to increase the volume of trade between the two countries. "This country could not export goods in huge quantities to a large-scale producer like America," he said, "but it is probable that we will have a greater range of specialty, or luxury, good to offer, for which we could get a distinctive market in the United States."

Obviously, he said, it would be to the advantage of the United States to encourage trade with other countries. Eire had a large sterling credit in England, which, as it could be exchanged for any currency in the world, would enable her to keep her part of any agreement with the United States. It would be in America's own interest to put other countries in a position in which the freest possible trading relationships would exist.

"After all," he said, "frozen currency will benefit nobody."

It was generally considered yesterday, though, that it was too early yet to say what arrangements would be made for small countries to acquire dollars, particularly where they were not exporters to dollar areas.

Submarine Feared Lost.—The United States submarine, Bullhead, is overdue from war patrol, and is presumed lost to enemy action, it was announced last night.

Lord Halifax, who is returning to Washington to take part in new financial negotiations with U.S. Treasury officials.

Bloodless Invasion Starts To-morrow

JAPAN yesterday gave a stand-still order to shipping, and announced four steps to bring about the reality of surrender (says Reuter):—

1. Troops will be completely withdrawn from Allied landing areas by to-day.
2. The "Cease Fire" has been ordered in Manchuria.
3. The Burma area surrender envoy will go to Rangoon to-morrow.
4. An occupation liaison office has been set up.

The first Allied troops are expected to land on Honshu to-morrow, according to the Japanese News Agency. The first news of plans for Allied landings on Kyushu was an official Japanese announcement that airborne troops would land at Kanoye airfield, in the south, and then at Takasu, further north-west.

General MacArthur announced last night that an advanced occupation party will land in Japan to-morrow, "to prepare the way for the main forces, which will arrive two days later."

Ships of the British East Indies Fleet are awaiting orders to steam down the Malacca Strait to occupy Singapore and the Malay Peninsula. Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser's flagship, the Duke of York, and Admiral Sir Henry Rawlings' flagship, the King George V, will anchor in Tokyo Bay.

Reuter reports that fighting has ended in Burma, and Japanese General H.Q. has informed general MacArthur that hostilities will cease in Manchuria, Sakhalin and other areas "on the conclusion of local negotiations, without waiting until the date of the cessation of hostilities prescribed in the imperial command."

The Moscow communiqué said that Russian forces continue to advance, and that Soviet airborne troops in Southern Manchuria yesterday landed in Kanto and another town and occupied them, while troops of the 2nd Far Eastern Front (in the southern part of Sakhalin Island) occupied the town and port of Osso and the town of Massy. It was stated also that in the area of Mukden Soviet troops liberated a camp for Allied prisoners of war, housing 1,670 officers and men and 28 generals, and that Soviet troops yesterday captured more than 14,000 Japanese officers and men.

A message from General MacArthur to Japanese Imperial H.Q., broadcast by Manila Radio, said:—"The Japanese forces in Hong Kong will surrender to Rear-Admiral Harcourt, Royal Navy, at a time subsequent to August 31st, and in accordance with arrangements made directly by Admiral Harcourt."

General Eisenhower being greeted by Lord Londonderry, Chancellor of Queen's University, Belfast, on his arrival at the University, where he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Northern Ireland Honours General Eisenhower

GENERAL EISENHOWER yesterday received the freedom of the City of Belfast and an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at Queen's University.

A large crowd congregated outside the City Hall at luncheon hour to hear the broadcast of proceedings at the luncheon, and remained to get a glimpse of the Supreme Allied Commander.

The General had stayed on the previous night at Lismara, Whiteabbey, as the guest of the Lord Mayor, Sir Crawford McCullagh, and from there yesterday morning he motored to Queen's University.

After the ceremony he drove to the City Hall, where he inspected a guard of honour composed of British and U.S. forces. He also stopped to salute the memorial plinth which was erected to commemorate the arrival of the U.S. forces in Northern Ireland.

The public gallery was packed.

BRITISH STAND

There was loud applause when General Eisenhower referred to the British nation, which, he said, stood up undaunted in the face of the Nazi blitz.

"May I be permitted," he said, "to pay homage to what may all be summed up in one single word—character."

The casket containing the certificate of the freedom of the city was presented to General Eisenhower by the Lord Mayor, who said that no general ever shouldered a greater responsibility.

At the luncheon, General Eisenhower, after referring to the friendliness extended to him, said that there were many forces and influences contributing to the victory in Europe. "Without Northern Ireland, I do not see how the American forces could have been concentrated in England to bring about victory," he said.

Unless Northern Ireland had been a definitely co-operative part of the British Empire, he did not see how the concentration of U.S. forces in England could have been carried out. That was a tribute to their people for the path they took in the war.

It had been said that the Irish people had a nose for finding out any trouble there was in the world. From his personal point of view, he had reason to be grateful for this, because three of his closest associates were from that part of Ireland. Sir Alan Brooke, Sir Harold Alexander, and Sir Bernard Montgomery. Sir Alan Brooke and he had many counsels which had gone on into the night. They had struggled and thought out how they should use their forces with the least lost in lives. He was an accomplished and brilliant soldier, to whom the British and U.S.A. people owed a great debt. General Alexander was a man of great experience and brilliant reputation, who almost took the lead among the galaxy of stars in the military firmament, and who, in subordinating himself, insured that there would be no quarrel among them in their effort to rid themselves of the Nazis.

"MONTY"

Lastly, among those associated with him there was their "Monty," a warrior who, in his personal habits, could never approve of his (General Eisenhower's) vice. He never took a glass of beer. (Laughter.) All three of those men had been great props holding up the United Nations, General Eisenhower declared, after paying tribute to Sir John Dill.

General Eisenhower concluded by saying that it was the first occasion he had been able to pay tribute to those great men, because it was his first public visit to their homeland.

Speaking at Queen's University, General Eisenhower said that the United Nations had thought and acted on a global scale. They had learned to confer and plan together candidly and with a confidence that increased with direct contact and growth of personal friendships. Those were the fundamentals of victory.

Canadian P.O.W. Charged

Taken prisoner in the 1942 Dieppe raid, a Canadian private was accused at a Farnboro' (Hampshire) court-martial yesterday of having aided the Germans while a prisoner.

The private, George Hale (25), of the Essex Scottish Regiment, whose home is at Windsor, Ontario, has pleaded not guilty to a charge that he "voluntarily aided the enemy in that in Germany, between November, 1942, and March, 1943, he voluntarily acted as an informer for the enemy of information useful to the enemy obtained by him from Allied prisoners-of-war."

Private R. H. Harwood, of the Canadian Black Watch, and a native of Virginia, U.S.A., stated, in evidence, that he also was taken prisoner in the Dieppe raid. When Hale asked him how much he (Harwood) was getting, he replied: "One dollar 30 cents a day—the same as you." Hale said that he was getting more than that, and that he had 5,000 dollars deposited for him in a neutral country.

Harwood added: "Hale told me the money was given to him for picking up information and turning it over to the Germans." He said that later he heard Hale asking questions of a group of prisoners about military matters and ammunition dumps in England.

The case was adjourned until Monday.

Berlin Conductor Shot.—Leo Borchard, conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, was shot dead on Thursday night when his car did not stop when challenged by an American sentry, says Luxembourg Radio.—(Reuter.)

AUSTRALIA FIGHTING FOR RECOGNITION AS PRINCIPAL POWER

[Reuter, A.P., and P.A. Reports.]

"THERE is still a deplorable tendency, now that the fighting is over, to relegate Australia to subordinate status, and either not consult it at all or to consult it in a perfunctory way and not on a footing of equality. This process will have to be arrested, not only in the interests of Australia, but of the British Commonwealth as a whole," Dr. Herbert Evatt, Australia's Minister for External Affairs, said yesterday in a statement which brought to a climax Australia's diplomatic struggle with Britain over recognition as a principal Power in dealing with major international issues.

"Clearly, the whole situation should be reviewed at once, with a view to according Australia rights to an effective voice in the peace settlement, to which she is entitled by reason of her outstanding contribution to overthrow our deadly enemies," Dr. Evatt stated.

Dr. Evatt's statement was made public after the British Dominions Secretary, Lord Addison, had denied that Britain had opposed Australia's admission to the Japanese surrender negotiations with the status of a principal Power.

Dr. Evatt said that the difference between Britain and the Australian Government had been over whether General Sir Thomas Blamey should be attached to the British service representative at the Japanese surrender or be a direct representative of Australia.

"The Dominions Office replied, on August 17th, that the United States Department of State had rejected Australia's claim, and that Blamey could only 'accompany' the United Kingdom representative at the surrender," said Dr. Evatt. Thereupon the Australian Government took up the matter direct with General MacArthur and with the United States' Acting Minister in Canberra.

"The result was that the United States Government acceded to Australia's claim to be represented directly, in recognition of the outstanding part Australia had played in the war against Japan."

Dr. Evatt again registered a protest that Britain had agreed to the Potsdam declaration without consulting Australia.

"Again, there is the matter of the Council of Foreign Ministers," he proceeded, "From that Council at present, Australia, a principal belligerent against Japan, is excluded, even in relation to the Japanese settlement, whilst China is included without having been a belligerent in Europe. In our view this is unsatisfactory, and we know that our opinion is shared by New Zealand."

MAINTAINING UNITY

Mr. Peter Fraser, New Zealand Prime Minister, said in Parliament yesterday that he was concerned that New Zealand unity with the United Kingdom should be maintained above everything. There was no indication so far, he said, that Australia say more than New Zealand should be a signatory. This was no reflection on either country, both of which would be represented.

He said he hoped the smaller nations would be given equality with the larger nations, but, unfortunately, the San Francisco, Teheran, Yalta and Potsdam decisions were just the opposite. The Greater Powers predominated in the world at present. They had to realise that and make the best of it. Mr. Fraser added that so long as the present Government was in office, it was not going to quarrel with the mother country, even if she could not always extend to New Zealand the equality New Zealand would like because of international conditions.

At Westminster yesterday the final plenary meeting at the third session of the Council of U.N.R.R.A. (United Nations' Relief and Rehabilitation Association) was marked by a sharp protest by Mr. Bruce, the Australian delegate. He criticised the attitude of the Soviet Union delegate in voting against a motion which Australia proposed, "That Australia, Brazil and Yugo-Slavia be added to the Central Committee."

Mr. Bruce said: "I say with all respect to the Soviet Republic that I think that this Council has been treated in almost an insulting way, and I do not hesitate to say so. We have just been treated as if we did not count at all."

He went on to say that one of the great issues which the world is up against is "whether there is to be domination by the great Powers or whether the great principles for which we fought in the war are going to be upheld and maintained, not only nationally, but internationally.

"I can only express my very deep protest," he said, "at what has taken place, and I would ask that the Soviet Republic should consider whether that is the way to treat a great international body. I would also ask them to consider whether it is not their duty to give their reasons why they object.

On a roll-call vote, 29 were in favour, and four against. There were three abstentions.

A resolution to add to the membership of the Central Committee requires a majority that includes all existing members of the Committee. The U.S.S.R., which is one of these members, voted against, and the U.S.A., another member, abstained, so the resolution fell through.

"To the United States I say that I regret equally that they should not have indicated to the world their views with regard to the proposal before this Council."

France and Canada were included in the membership of the Central Committee.

When the U.S.A. proposed that the member Governments should make available an additional contribution, equivalent approximately to one per cent. of the national income of the contributing country for the year ending June, 1943, Mr. Noel-Baker, supporting, said: "If Britain pays its one per cent. it is not doing so out of surpluses of goods or wealth. Any contribution will mean a real sacrifice for some time to come."

AIRMAN ACQUITTED OF FOUR CHARGES

THE Uxbridge R.A.F. Court-martial trying Warrant-Officer Raymond Davis Hughes (22), of Mold, Flintshire, on charges of having voluntarily assisted Germany while a prisoner of war, found, last night, that no case had been made against him on four of the eleven charges.

The four charges alleged that he gave information on the method adopted for carrying out the raid on Peenemunde, in which he was shot down, and, alternatively, was guilty of conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline; that he broadcast German propaganda from Radio Metropol, and that he advised the German authorities on methods of combating bombing attacks on Berlin.

On the remaining counts he is charged with asking prisoners, on behalf of the German authorities, to fill in forms containing questions which he well knew concerned R.A.F. formations; alternatively, conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline in the same circumstances; making propaganda records at the Rundfunkhaus; attempting to broadcast German propaganda from Radio Metropol; lending money to persons attempting to form a "British Free Corps" to fight against Russian guerrillas, and accepting employment at a salary from the German Foreign Office and from Radio Metropol.

The hearing was adjourned until to-day.

Strikers to Resume On Monday

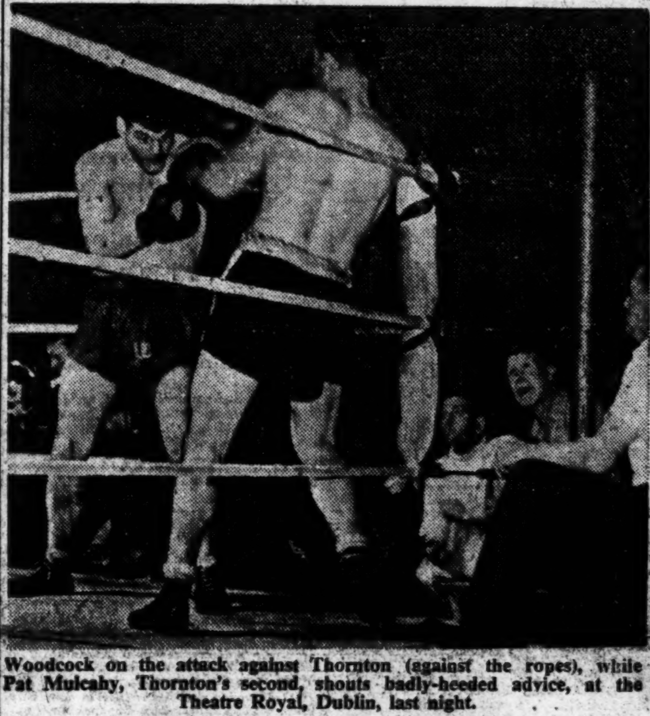

THE Drogheda cement works strike has been settled, and the men will resume work on Monday morning, as announced in yesterday's Irish Times. The strike began five weeks ago, when 27 male packers refused to work, following the dismissal of an employee. It is understood the man in question will be reinstated.

The seven-week-old strike in Clonmel and Cahir bakeries for a fortnight's holidays ended at a conference in Clonmel yesterday. Work in the bakeries will be resumed next week.

Six Dublin canning firms have been closed, because, it is stated, hides will not be accepted by the hide and skin merchants. The employees have been refusing to handle hides and skins from the Dublin master butchers. About 300 workers will be thrown out of employment. Roughly, 1,000 cattle were killed at the Abattoir each week for the canners.

A parade of Dublin workers took place through the principal city streets last night in support of the laundresses and butchers on strike for a fortnight's holidays with pay. A meeting was later held at the Parnell Monument, in O'Connell street. The demonstration was organised by the Dublin Trades Union Council.

The meeting was addressed by Miss Louie Bennett (Women Workers' Union), Councillor Miss H. Chenevix, Councillor J. Larkin (Workers' Union of Ireland), and Mr. J. O'Keefe, Secretary, National League of the Blind.

Woodcock on the attack against Thornton (against the ropes), while Pat Mulcahy, Thornton's second, shouts badly-heeded advice, at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, last night.

Woodcock Wins

BRUCE WOODCOCK, the British and Empire heavyweight boxing champion, beat Martin Thornton, the champion of Eire, in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, last night. Thornton made a very poor showing and refused to continue after the third round, the towel being thrown in from his corner. A full report appears in page 4.

The underground market in tickets for the fight came to the curb at Burgh quay and College street. Bidding opened at about par at 7.20, forty minutes before the time of the first bout on the programme, but by 7.43 sellers were experiencing a panic.

At that time a buyer took a £2 ticket for 35s., after bringing the seller to the ticket office of the theatre to ensure that the ticket was genuine. Other £2 tickets were sold at the same price. Before the street market opened seriously these tickets had been bringing 45s. each.

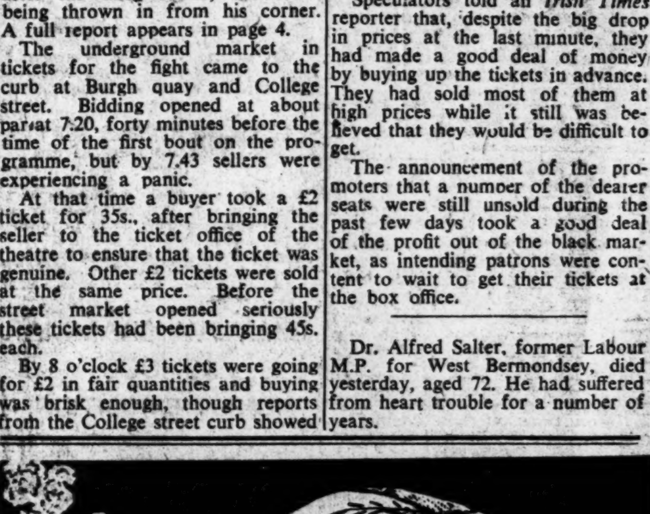

By 8 o'clock £3 tickets were going for £2 in fair quantities and buying was brisk enough, though reports from the College street curb showed a declining interest among the public.

At about 8.20 the bottom fell out of the market generally, and by 8.40, when the boxing programme was well on its way, £5 tickets were selling at £2 and £2 tickets at 10s.

Speculators told an Irish Times reporter that, despite the big drop in prices at the last minute, they had made a good deal of money by buying up the tickets in advance. They had sold most of them at high prices while it still was believed that they would be difficult to get.

The announcement of the promoters that a number of the dearer seats were still unsold during the past few days took a good deal of the profit out of the black market, as intending patrons were content to wait to get their tickets at the box office.

Dr. Alfred Salter, former Labour M.P. for West Bermondsey, died yesterday, aged 72. He had suffered from heart trouble for a number of years.

SPRAWLED across Eastern Asia is the 4,277,000 square miles of China. Here live more than one-fifth of the human beings in the world, about 360,000,000 people—a people about whom the Western mind has learned much but never really understood. When Northern Europe was inhabited only by barbarous tribes, when the people of Britain were still savage, China was one of the great nations of the earth. The Ts'in, the Han, the Sung dynasties were part of her history long before the age of discovery and it may well be said that she was in decline long before Europe realised her greatness. To the culture of the world China has contributed a great deal and some of her architecture, sculpture, pottery and embroidery is as beautiful as any in the world. There are many exquisite examples of the architecture of China's Golden Age with its lovely pagodas, its temples with curving roofs and carved stonework and the porcelains, bronzes and delicate jade and ivory carvings of that period have never been surpassed. There are about eighteen spoken languages or dialects in China yet there is only one written language. The reason for this is that the written characters (or ideographs) do not represent sounds but are more like pictures and each picture means the same thing to every Chinese. There are over 44,000 of these characters in the written language. The Great Wall (started in the third century before Christ), the Grand Canal (begun early in the Christian era), the tombs of the Ming Emperors, the temple of Confucius at Kuh-fu are some of the monuments of the lost grandeur of China. Time matters little in this ancient nation. Its future will always be dominated by its past. There was greatness then, there may be greatness again.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

STORYTELLERS—2. By FRANK O'CONNOR

Stendhal

AT various times I have had four copies of "The Charterhouse of Parma." To-day I haven't one. That shows the dual nature of the Stendhal fan. We are all of us out to make converts. Nobody ever distributed tracts more hopefully than we distribute copies of Stendhal—or to less effect. Over a hundred years after his death he is still the novelist of a literary clique. He stands almost outside the history of the novel, though, with Jane Austen, he remains one of its greatest masters. "A bit of a highbrow himself," says the Penguin "Short History of French Literature," "he has always been rather the darling of the highbrows . . . and neither Le Rouge et le Noir nor La Chartreuse de Parme will ever be in any sense popular."

The reason for that is intelligible enough. The novel, as I have said, is a middle-class form with middle-class standards. "It is a truth universally acknowledged that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife." So, with a sardonic eye on managing mothers, begins the greatest of English novels, but open Stendhal's first great novel and within a page or two you find yourself reading: "As a matter of fact these sober folk wield there the most irritating form of despotism; it is owing to that vile word that residence in small towns is intolerable to anyone who has lived in that great republic we call Paris." At once you are up against it. Do you live in a provincial town, and if so are you one of the "sober folk" who wield this most irritating form of despotism? If you are your hackles will rise at every chapter; and while denying indignantly that you have ever wielded any form of despotism, you will at once write off to the Censorship Board asking to have this book suppressed at once, and the Censorship Board, hearing for the first time of Stendhal, will suppress his entire output. Or have they done so already? How can one keep a count?

Bourgeois Triumphant

"He is a well-bred man," Mary Crawford thinks as she studies Edmund; "he makes the best of things." Stendhal is as ill-bred as any Irishman, and, indeed, it is Ireland one keeps on thinking of during the whole first half of "Scarlet and Black." The Emperor is dead, the French Revolution a memory, the Catholic middle classes are in the saddle. Mr. de Valera, one feels sure, will appear at any moment in its pages, which are full of the mental paralysis, the moral corruption, of a middle class without traditions or ideals. Julien Sorel, a carpenter's son, in a provincial town which might be anywhere in Ireland, secretly reads Rousseau's "Confessions" and "The Memoirs of St. Helena" (as it might be "Ulysses" or "The Confessions of a Young Man"). He is poor, and knows that his only hope of escaping from that abominable little town is by becoming a priest, so, though he is an atheist, he begins upon a career of calculated hypocrisy. In Ireland he would have joined the Knights of Columbanus, and one cannot help regretting the way in which Stendhal would have described Mikie and Johnnie Mac, marching blindfolded with their hands on one another's shoulders to a solemn march on a cheap harmonium. He takes a job as tutor in the mayor's house and becomes the lover of the mayor's gentle and pious wife. Here one sketches a question mark, for the mayor's wife is an aristocrat, which she would not be in Ireland, but the analogy holds with Julien. He does not do it for love or passion. He is an egotist, working out his sense of inferiority. He must have a love affair, and it must be with a lady; otherwise he can never become a great man like his hero Joyce—sorry, I mean Napoleon. He will hold hands with her before the clock strikes ten or else go to his room and blow his brains out.

The Seminary

Finally he goes to the seminary which is distinctly reminiscent of the seminary described by Gerald O'Donovan in "Father Ralph":

"He made haste to brush his coat and go downstairs; he was late. An under-master rebuked him severely; instead of seeking to excuse himself, Julien crossed his arms on his breast. 'Peccavi, pater optime,' he said with a contrite air. This was a most successful beginning. The sharp wits among the seminarists saw that they had to deal with a man who was not new to the game."

But Julien, competing in hypocrisy with the seminarists, is only deluding himself. They are experts. The only people who like him are the old parish priest and the President of the seminary; for these men are saints, and they see under the hypocritical young man the enthusiast and the dreamer who sooner or later will smash himself upon the rocks of materialism. They too have been broken by Mr. de Valera. The President's "masterpiece of ecclesiastical diction," his resignation from the seminary, tells us the whole story in one line. "They stole the wood from his shed, they poisoned his dog, etc., etc." That etc., etc.!—how well we know all it implies.

Money

There is no doubt about it, after reading "Pride and Prejudice," this is His Majesty's Opposition with a vengeance. Stendhal paints that atrocious picture of clerical intrigue and political corruption not because he disliked religion, but because he disliked the middle classes. Pirard, the President of the seminary, is an eighteenth century figure, a Tory and a Jansenist. For six years he had fought single-handed "against Marie Alacoque, the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the Jesuits and his Bishop." But when he says dryly that he is leaving Besançon with only five hundred and twenty francs, his admirers, "blinded by love of money," having embraced him with tears, say to one another; "The good abbé might have spared himself that lie, it is really too absurd."

Money! That word haunts the history of the nineteenth century novel. Stendhal's friend Balzac was crazy about it, as crazy as any of the old merchants he drew. Thackeray was fascinated by it at the same time as he was shocked. "Vanity Fair" is about nothing else, and it is only by dripping sentimentality on every page that he can overcome the revulsion it causes him. Julien Sorel and his hypocrisy, Stendhal himself and his peculiar morality, are both protests against materialism. The novel is barely born when the opposition begins, and the opposition is centred in France and on the Catholic middle classes. Stendhal's fury against them continues through Flaubert and the Goncourts, and culminates in the naturalists who believed you must paint life like a leg of mutton. To this day the average English man of letters does not know what you mean if you refer to Naturalism. He thinks it is some sort of literary theory. An Irishman at once thinks of Moore and Joyce. Obviously, the Catholic middle classes and writers are allergic to one another.

No Model

That is partly why Stendhal is one of the worst writers to take as a model. He stands with one leg in the eighteenth century, and his style of writing belongs to the period. His novels are really picaresque romances. The grocer cannot become a rogue and vagabond, so his characteristic art form centres about familiar things. He borrows the local colour of a Scott novel to give poetry to house and street and shop. Stendhal does not know how to use local colour. He has no conception of the novel as an art form. He is not interested in character (character in that sense is a form of local colour) but in psychology. He does not take a character and ask himself: "How would this man behave under certain circumstances?" but rather takes an event, and then asks himself: "How did he come to do that?" or "How did he feel when he had done it?" Consequently his characters are not so much drawn as hacked out; after that astonishing love affair between Julien Sorel and Mme. de Rênal we feel we know everything about them, but it is exceedingly hard to say how we do know it. Jane Austen will create a character by a hundred tiny touches before she even allows it to act at all. Stendhal will practically ignore the character until he wants it to make a decision, and then slash out the outlines in three or four strokes.

"The Charterhouse of Parma"

It was this picaresque approach which drove him to antiquarianism and history, and finally led him to write his masterpiece, "The Charterhouse of Parma." With all these "sober" people, "blinded by love of money," what chance had a poor devil of a picaresque novelist? So he turned for his inspiration to Italy, where the passions were hotter than at home, and for preference to Italy of the Renaissance, which had inspired Webster and Ford.

Is "The Charterhouse of Parma," as I have always thought it, the only novel one can set side by side with "Pride and Prejudice"? Is it a novel at all? I find it hard to say. I must confess that when I read it last, it seemed to have lost something, and I was frankly bored to tears with Fabrizio's antics in the tower. But that, after all, is the price the picaresque novelist has to pay for keeping his hero hovering between life and death—nothing is duller than the detective story you have read before, and the more you ration the episodic interest; confine your theme to some trifling misunderstanding or misadventure; the misunderstanding between Elizabeth Bennet and Mr. Darcy, for instance, or the missing cheque which causes all the trouble to poor Mr. Crawley in "The Last Chronicle of Barset," the more you reduce the evaporation which results from reading and the more certain you may be that the reader who wants something with which to pass an evening will not wrinkle his brows and say: "But I've read that twice already." Nobody has ever felt like that about Jane Austen or Trollope. The novel is a home-keeping art, and "Vanity Fair" never forgave its author for taking it abroad.

Wings to His Heels

"The Charterhouse of Parma" is a happier book than "Scarlet and Black." It has no spleens to work off. Julien Sorel has clapped wings to his heels and become Fabrizio Del Dongo, who has only the four walls of the tower of Parma between him and his desire, instead of Maynooth—sorry, Besançon Seminary. Clelia Conti has as many religious scruples as Mme. de Reynal, but in this Italy of the little kingdoms, still living in the eighteenth century, these minor difficulties can be overcome. It is only necesary that Fabrizio shall become a bishop! All Stendhal's characters have become aerated in the lofty atmosphere of the Renaissance. Certainly, it is the greatest of all romances, and if "the most irritating form of despotism" is getting you down, if "Ulysses," locked in the bottom drawer of the desk, has ceased to charm you, and you feel that Mary Crawford would never set you down as a well-bred man, this book from beginning to end is magic.

But you had better get hold of it quick, now that the Censorship Board knows.

THE CITY, 1945

By G. E. HETHERINGTON

THE seas widen, the sands silting to hide
This fading Atlantis, an imagined city:
The streets are full of rubble, the wells are dried,
Only the starving dogs of pride and pity
Roam the decaying squares, the untidy gardens,
Or feast on ashy bones in backyard bins:
Life in these tenements congeals and hardens
About a core of rusting petrol tins.

This city's name? Ah, name it not! It stood
Between the river and the hills, a place
Of golden spires and palaces: we brood
Upon its passing out of time and space
Beneath the dust of war; but who defends
Love, Beauty, Death from their appointed ends?

Visions of London

The County of London Plan. Explained by E. J. Carter and Ernö Goldfinger. A Penguin Publication. 3/6 net.

THE cover and pictorial contents of this many-coloured brochure are more suggestive of a Christmas gift-book than of a serious effort to explain Sir Patrick Abercrombie's and Mr. J. H. Forshaw's plans for Greater London. That appearance is deceptive. Into its 88 pages the authors have contrived to compress all the salient facts and figures on which the expert planners based their proposals and, with extraordinary skill, to illustrate the outstanding features of the new plan in a quite unusually attractive series of photographs, charts, coloured maps and statistical records.

What — ask the authors — is London? Is it the old city of a single square mile and its population of less than 10,000 citizens, whose Lord Mayor and Corporation insist on planning their own physically tiny area? Is the Metropolitan Traffic Area of 2,400 square miles and its population of more than 10,000,000? Or is it the "County Council" area of 116 square miles and 4,000,000 inhabitants? Which of these "Greater Londons" came under review in the expert planners' report? Strictly it was the County Council's area, of the 116 square miles that cover the City of Westminster and 27 other administrative "Boroughs," all of which are free to object to features of the Abercrombie-Forshaw plan. Hence, say the authors, the new plan "has to be conceived of as an operation in local government" compelling planners "to deal with things as they now are."

Wide Backgrounds

Consequently, Sir Patrick Abercrombie and his colleagues had to study their problem within a comparatively limited framework—but against the much wider backgrounds of surrounding areas into which the population of the County Council district continues to flow.

The significance of that outward movement appears in the fact that the County Council population fell by almost 400,000 during the seven years 1931 to 1938.

Thus the experts had to face thorny administrative problems inside their allotted area, together with rapidly increasing social and physical changes in its contiguous urban districts. Facing these extraordinarily complex issues, the experts' efforts were devoted to the production of suggestive, but, nevertheless, practical and detailed proposals, which—say the authors of the brochure—may more properly be regarded as a series of planned processes than as a concrete plan.

For details of those varied and integrated processes — which affect transport, housing, recreation and other public utilities, and may combine to minister to the housewife's convenience and comfort—the reader must be referred to the brochure which, being itself an elaborate review, cannot adequately be reviewed in these columns. Indispensable to the architect and planning expert, its contents ought to be pondered by all serious students of civic activities.

Memoirs of a Statesman

Memoirs. By Viscount Samuel. Cresset Press. 15/- net.

ALTHOUGH this book consists of only three hundred pages, it contains a vast amount of information about life and politics in the last sixty years. As well as being a scholar and a statesman, Herbert Samuel is a philosopher, so that he writes about the conflicts and controversies of his crowded life without bitterness, without even a suggestion of unpleasantness.

It might easily have been different. There is a great deal about Palestine in the book, and Viscount Samuel, as a Jew, might have been less strictly fair to the Arab viewpoint than he is. However, the fact that he was selected in the first and most difficult years of the Mandate as High Commissioner for Palestine shows that there was every confidence in his qualities as a statesman and as a man with the mental equipment for fair and impartial rule and judgment.

He quotes a certain amount of authority to refute "the legend" that "either carelessly or cynically British Governments had given contradictory pledges to the Arabs and to the Jews, that Palestine had become 'the twice-promised land.'" Among others, he quotes T. E. Lawrence in support of that refutation, which, one feels, is not introduced in defence of the Balfour Declaration, but as a necessary part of the valuable Palestinian review that some chapters of the "Memoirs" constitute.

A Fruitful Period

The years between the financial crisis of 1931, bringing "National" government in its wake, and the present war are surveyed from a liberal and personal post of observation; but much more interesting to the reader whose knowledge of the period may be detached in years and rather vague in detail is his account of the pre-1914 Liberal administration, in which he served principally as Postmaster-General and President of the Local Government Board. In this country we are inclined to think of that period of British politics as concerned only with the Home Rule Bill and the Parliament Bill. Actually it was one of the most fruitful periods of social legislation in British history, including the introduction and passing of the Old Age Pensions Act and the National Insurance Act. Viscount Samuel's fund of information about the legislation of 1906-1914 makes his chapters about those years most informative.

There is one excellent story in the book. Viscount Samuel was present when H. M. Stanley, of "In Darkest Africa," received the Honorary Degree of a Doctor of Civil Laws at Oxford. When the formula had been recited a solitary voice from the gallery was heard saying, in the moment of silence: "Doctor Stanley, I presume."

Aftermath

The Adventure of Reconstruction. By the Rt. Hon. Lord Woolton, C.H.: Cassell. 5/- net.

Progress to World Peace. By K. F. Bieligk: Hutchinson. 1/6 net.

BOTH of these short books are concerned with the "brave new world." By common consent Lord Woolton has been one of the ablest and most successful of Britain's war-time political discoveries, and his work at the Ministry of Food gave promise that he would be preeminently successful as Minister of Reconstruction. The electorate has now ruled otherwise, but his collected speeches are still of value as outlining a general attitude towards very pressing problems. Mr. Bieligk, who is of German origin, will not find his opinions and the putting of them into practice affected personally by the general election. He has written a historical essay showing the necessity for international organisation and arbitration, and stressing how great was German responsibility in preventing world-wide adherence to arbitration principles. His arguments are cogent and well developed.

Russian Novels

Brusilov's Break-Through. By S. Sergeyev-Tsensky. Hutchinson. 12/6.

No Easy Victories. By S. Golubov. Hutchinson. International Authors, Ltd. 9/6 net.

BOTH of these novels provide fictional reconstructions of historical campaigns of the Russian Army. Mr. Sergeyev-Tsensky deals with General Brusilov's offensive in the spring and summer of 1916, which wrecked the front of the Austro-Hungarian Armies. "Brusilov's Break-Through" is not a novel so much as a series of battle-pieces; its dominant theme is Russian valour and its moral the desirability of the offensive spirit among officers of all grades. Personal matters are introduced only in so far as they bear on the conduct of war-like operations. The book will be of interest to amateur tacticians, but not to the ordinary reader of fiction

Mr. Golubov has chosen Bagration as his hero, and the campaign of 1812 as his theme. The moral of "No Easy Victories" is similar to that of "Brusilov's Break-Through," but the outline of military strategy shows much less evidence of painstaking historical research. The heroics of Mr. Golubov's characters are embarrassingly childish, the characters themselves never come alive, and the style, whether it is the fault of Mr. Golubov or his translator, is cumbersome and cliché-ridden.

Books in Brief

The Understudy, by D. H. Landels. The rise and fall of a theatrical dictator in the West End. A capably written story, by an author of possibilities. (Hurst and Blackett, 8/6.)

Homeward the Heart, by Margaret Mackay. A fairly standard triangular romance, set in Honolulu after Pearl Harbour. (Hutchinson. 8/6.)

Subject to Authority, by Isabel C. Clarke. A pious novel, full of witty, lovable, high-minded, intelligent Catholics and superficial, unpleasant Protestants. (Hutchinson. 10/6.)

Time Enough Later, by Kylie Tennant. A well-built novel, on the insecure foundation of a quite incredible hero. The author has a fresh, pleasing style, which makes the book enjoyable. (Macmillan. 8/6.)

The Founder of St. Columba's

A Forgotten Genius: Sewell of St. Columba's and Radley. By Lionel James. Faber and Faber. 21/- net.

THE subject of Mr. James's biography, the Rev. William Sewell (1804-1874), is known to many Irishmen as the founder of the College of St. Columba at Rathfarnham. Although his two educational foundations are the only enduring memorials to Sewell's activities, Mr. James has provided ample proof that this remarkable man's other varied talents were widely recognised and respected by his brilliant contemporaries, many of whom were prominently associated with the Oxford Movement.

Mr. James's facts have been assembled from an unusually catholic bibliography. His most frequently quoted sources of authority are Sewell's own writings; his reminiscences, his letters, and his St. Columba's journal. More revealing, however, are the impressions recorded by Sewell's associates at Oxford; men who understood his relations with Pusey, Newman and Keble, and other great figures of the 1830's. From their evidence, it would appear that Sewell supported the Tractarians—morally if not in print—until John Henry Newman published Tract 90, the momentous document which was the prelude to Newman's acceptance of Roman Catholicism. Tract 90 caused Sewell's Anglican blood to boil, and horrified him by what he considered its disloyalty to the Church of England Prayer Book.

Sewell's Character

In Mr. James's eyes, Sewell was never in error. The unprejudiced reader may be excused if he cannot always regard that pious worthy in quite so mellow a light. The great weight of the incidental evidence in this book suggests that Sewell was an earnest, well-intentioned, self-opinionated scholar, stubborn to a degree and sincerely convinced that anybody, be he Prime Minister of England or Primate of All Ireland, who held convictions not in full accord with his own, was pathetically and automatically wrong. Sewell's "sense of humour," as demonstrated by Mr. James, generally took the form of laboriously facetious letters reproaching the co-founders of Radley and St. Columba's for their tardiness in raising funds to allow the work to continue, or occasional outbursts of pedantic flippancy, such as the use of "dog Latin." Sewell's most irritating characteristic must have been his pious arrogance—combined at times with breath-taking ignorance. It is, indeed, surprising to find a truly great scholar—and there is little doubt that Sewell was at least that—regarding the Jesuit Order as a device of the devil worthy of the most militant hatred.

To Teach Irish

It may surprise some readers to learn that Sewell—with Lord Adare, William Monsell and J. H. Todd—founded St. Columba's with the deliberate object of teaching Irish to the sons of Protestant land-owners, so that they might in later years combat Catholicism in what was then the language of the common people. The teaching of Irish with this intention was later discontinued, but of recent years it has occupied a prominent place in the College curriculum. It is now taught, however, with no more ulterior motive than to equip the boys to grapple with Intermediate and Leaving Certificates and Civil Service examinations.

Although "genius" may be a somewhat extreme term to apply to Sewell, it cannot be denied that, with the possible exception of Arnold, he was the greatest educational reformer of the nineteenth century. His conception of a public school as a domestic community, in which the masters and pupils are on terms of reasonable amity, if not equality, was regarded as revolutionary by his contemporaries, but has since become the accepted basic principle of all thriving schools. Again, Sewell's views on games and the teaching of "gentler arts" were considerably ahead of his period. Perhaps, his greatest contribution to educational practice was his theory of "adaptability," as evidenced by the teaching of Irish at St. Columba's, and of cooking and military drawing at Radley during the Crimean War. This principle is still upheld at St. Columba's, where the boys recently have been encouraged to devote their spare time to agriculture.

Other Sides

In common with most nineteenth century divines, William Sewell dabbled in literature in his less busy moments. A highly-paid contributor on ecclesiastical matters to the Quarterly Review, he also wrote some religious verses that won the approval of Robert Southey, and a novel—"Hawkstone"—in the Disraeli manner, wherein he showed an unexpected flair for the melodramatic by introducing as villain a fiendish Jesuit, who is devoured by rats in a secret passage of his own contrivance.

Mr. James's book is scholarly and interesting. It should prove invaluable to Old Columbans and Old Radleians, and merits more than passing attention from other readers.

The South Seas

Britain and The South Seas. By Sir Harry Luke. Longmans. 1/- net.

SIR HARRY LUKE has continued well into the twentieth century the old British tradition of excellence in more capacities than one. One of the most scholarly of modern public servants, his intellectual zest and his fluent pen have done much for unusual and out-of-the-way languages, customs and peoples. Once a Mediterranean expert, he was, with the inscrutable wisdom of the Colonial Office, which apparently ignores a man's non-official career, transferred to the Pacific, and we now have the fruits of his observation in his most recent appointment. Britain's relations with her Pacific dependencies have been, on the whole, satisfactory; and so this is a very pleasant, descriptive little book, interspersed with excellent photographs, and full of that odd information which adds delight to a volume.

FORECAST

Mark Twain said that the main thing about the weather is that people talk a lot about it, but nobody does anything about it. And you can find quite a lot to say about the weather just now.

But a lot of business-men are that way about their advertising, too. To ensure that the goodwill of 1939 is still alive, it is essential that your advertising should get started now. Many firms are thinking about it. Some have even got to talking about it. Only a very small number have done anything to give their business the restorative it is genuinely in need of, and to ensure that their customers will be there when goods really begin to flow again, and the only shortage is a shortage of customers.

Yes, we've been preaching about goodwill for a long time now. But this is probably the last thing we shall say about it—for time is getting very short now. Pretty soon it will be too late to do anything about goodwill. . .

He was one of a small group of Army air co-operation specialists, entrusted with the air defence of Britain, and planned the fighter escort system for the daylight raids on Germany.

He commanded No. 11 Fighter Group, which destroyed about 6,000 German aircraft. In 1941 he was Air Officer Commanding Northern Ireland.

AUSTRALIA'S PART

The recent war brought profound changes throughout the world, and the British Commonwealth is no exception to the general rule. When the war began all the Dominions followed the lead of the United Kingdom in its declaration of war against Germany. Any one of them had the absolute right to remain neutral if it so chose. The Statute of Westminster had confirmed the complete political independence of all the Dominions vis-à-vis the mother country, and nobody could have cavilled if any of them had chosen to remain outside the conflict. Eire actually did remain outside it; but her status was, and remains, in some question. South Africa entered the war on Britain's side after a long and heated debate in the national Parliament. The three other Dominions sprang to arms spontaneously and voluntarily, throwing their whole resources into the common struggle. At that time Germany was the only enemy. Italy came in later, when France had been crushed. Dominion troops, soldiers and airmen, as well as sailors, were rushed to Europe to help the British in their single-handed struggle against Hitlerism, and during the campaign in North Africa the Australians, in particular, played an outstanding part. Then came Pearl Harbour, transforming the entire complexion of the war. The Australian motherland was brought into imminent peril. For many years the danger of an eventual attack by Japan had been foreseen by the Australian people. Yet, when it came, they were taken unawares. All their plans had been based on the assumption that in time of danger Australia's integrity could be guaranteed by Great Britain and the other Dominions; but, when the time actually arrived, the British, Canadians and South Africans already were engaged in death grips with the German Wehrmacht. In these circumstances, Australia was forced to rely, in the first instance, on the valour of her own fighting men. Troops were sent back from North Africa and elsewhere to the Commonwealth, and an appeal was made for armed help to the United States. At no time was there ever the least suggestion, either in the case of Australia, or in that of New Zealand, of any weakening in the bonds uniting these Dominions to Great Britain. The facts, however, had to be faced; and it was painfully obvious to all concerned, including His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, that the British alone no longer were in a position to safeguard Australia's territorial integrity. The point to be remembered in Australia, as well as everywhere else, is that when the Japanese made their treacherous attack upon the American fleet, Great Britain was fighting Germany absolutely alone. The odds seemed to be heavily against her, and if she had not been able to hold out as she did hold out, there is not the smallest doubt that the Axis Powers would have won the war.

Now it is all over. Germany and Japan have been crushed, together with their miserable following of satellites. Once more the British Commonwealth has emerged in triumph from a world conflict; and although, in the nature of things, the British themselves did most of the fighting, every one of the Dominions contributed its full share to the achievement of a common victory. In particular, the Australians, having fought like tigers in North Africa, defended their own country with equal, if not even greater, valour. Their contribution to the Allied cause was out of all proportion to the number of their people; and it is only natural now that the Commonwealth should wish for some tangible recognition of the sacrifices which it has made. It is most unfortunate, therefore, that misunderstandings should have arisen between Canberra and London. Apparently, when arrangements were being made to take Japan's surrender, only the Great Powers were invited to participate as principals. These Powers are the United States, Great Britain, China and Russia; and the Australians feel very strongly that in the special circumstances they, too, ought to be included. They point out that, whereas Australian troops fought in the West as well as in the East—Commonwealth airmen may be seen any day in the streets of Dublin—the Chinese fought only in Asia. Furthermore, the Russians came into the war against Japan only at the last moment, and, when the Potsdam declaration was issued, the Soviet Government actually was neutral vis-à-vis Japan. What actually happened was that Sir Thomas Blamey, the Australian Commander-in-Chief, was invited to assist at the formal surrender of the Japanese Empire, not as a principal, but merely as a subordinate of the British representative. According to British statements, this apparent slight on the Australian people was a result of America's refusal to allow Australia to appear as a principal. Lord Addison, the new Dominions Secretary, has given a vigorous denial to the Australian assertion that Great Britain was to blame; and now the Australians have made direct representations to the White House, with the result that their demand has been conceded. It is a most unhappy business. All the Australian newspapers are at one in their claim that, at any rate, for the immediate purposes of the victory over Japan, the Commonwealth is entitled to be treated as co-equal in every respect with the Great Powers, arguing, not illogically, that Australia's significance does not depend on the size of her population, but rather upon her geographical position and her industrial potentialities. Her loyalty to the Crown and the Commonwealth is not in question. There is no more popular figure in the country than the Duke of Gloucester, the King's brother, who is Governor-General. It is quite certain, however, that, mainly as a result of the war, the Commonwealth of Australia, in common with all the other Dominions, has increased its feeling of national independence. For the sake of the whole Commonwealth and Empire, it is desirable that immediate cognisance of this fact should be taken in London. One of these days the whole problem of the Dominions Office will need to be tackled by the Government.

My Lady Nicotine

Irish smokers, much as they bemoan the hardships of their lot, have suffered comparatively little deprivation during the years of war. It may be true that only very skilful wheedling will draw a daily ration of ten cigarettes from the tobacconist; it may be true that the advent of visitors from the North of Ireland has imposed a special strain on the available stocks; nevertheless, few smokers have been reduced completely to despair. Britain, it seems, is experiencing at present a shortage more acute than any since the outbreak of war—partly, perhaps, because the workers in the cigarette factories were given two days of "V-J" holidays. In America, cigarette queues are quite a common sight, although, in Dublin, smokers will buy the plentiful American cigarettes only under protest, and feel it necessary to apologise when they offer them to their friends. As for the Continent of Europe, it appears that cigarettes there have such a high barter value that the visitor finds them better to carry with him than money. No doubt it would be possible to moralise upon the extent to which we are slaves to our appetites; but a sermon is not the same thing as emancipation. The fact, regrettable as it may be, is that tobacco nowadays is almost as universal a necessity as food. "It is the passion," said Molière, "of honest men, and he who lives without tobacco is not fit to live." The view is extreme, perhaps, but it has some sanction from custom; at any rate, a man who does not indulge in smoking is nowadays almost an eccentric. His foible, however, is one which leads now, as never before, to popularity. The man who, while he never passes cigarettes around himself, is never a charge upon his friends' cigarettes is sure to meet with a welcome; and if he can manage to produce a packet of ten as a present for his hostess, he is certain of another invitation. Anybody who can pander to the vices of others without being involved in them himself will conquer the world.

A LABOUR COURT

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—In connection with the present labour disputes in Dublin, it might be interesting to recall that in April, 1940, Seanad Eireann passed a resolution calling for the setting up of "an industrial court for the examination of industrial disputes and the promulgation of advisory judgments." The resolution aimed at preventing a strike or lock-out before a genuine independent effort had been made to solve the dispute. It proposed investigation by a permanent officer with the status, powers, salary and independence of a High Court judge, assisted by assessors. If such a Court were set up, its recommendations, if accepted by both parties, would mean no stoppage of work. If the recommendations were not accepted, the public would have before it a clear statement of the matter in dispute and a recommendation for settlement made by an independent officer of the State; the right to strike would be maintained and the proposal would in no way impair the powers of trade unions or of employers' associations.

We have frequently seen labour disputes settled by the appointment of a judge as investigator after the dispute had continued for a long time. Why not such a person be appointed to make the investigation before the strike or lock-out took place? This scheme, which is not a scheme of compulsory arbitration, has worked successfully in other countries, more particularly in the case of essential public services. The motion in 1940 was opposed by the Labour Party, and was not supported by the Minister for Industry and Commerce, then Mr. MacEntee. The Minister did, however, promise that the matter would have consideration if the motion were passed by the Seanad. The motion, which was moved by Senator Douglas, seconded by myself, and supported by various others, including members of the Fianna Fáil Party, was carried. The Government has made no move in the matter since.

No right-thinking citizen wants to see decent men and women parading outside their places of work for weeks on end with loss to themselves and inconvenience to the public, while conflicting accounts of the merits of the dispute are given by both sides. Surely it would be much better to have public investigation by an impartial and independent officer before action was taken by either party? The cost of such a Court would be a mere trifle compared to the loss and waste of various kinds involved in industrial disputes.—Yours, etc.,

MICHEAL HAYES.

BISHOP OF MEATH CONSECRATED

Canon James McCann, Ph.D., was yesterday consecrated Bishop of Meath in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh, by the Primate of All Ireland, the Most Rev. Dr. Gregg.

The Bishop-elect was presented to the Primate by the Bishops of Connor and Derry.

The Rev. O. A. Crawford Irwin (Durham), who preached, said that the Bishops of the Anglican Communion, at Lambeth in 1930, had expressed their desire that the office of Bishop should be everywhere exercised in a representative and constitutional manner, and truly express all that ought to be involved in the Christian family and the title "Father in God." This had been long familiar in the Church of Ireland, and was truly exemplified in its life, he declared.

The Church of Ireland, he added, had its place as a mother Church along with the Church of England in the great Anglican Communion. They must not forget the part which the sons of the Church of Ireland had played in building up the self-governing Churches across the seas which were in full communion with theirs.

KING SEES ATTLEE

Mr. Attlee had an audience of the King at Buckingham Palace yesterday before the King's departure with the Queen last night for their holiday in Scotland. Afterwards Mr. and Mrs. Attlee lunched with the King and Queen.

The King also held a Privy Council at which several members of the new Government took their oaths of office, and the new Attorney-General and Solicitor-General (Mr. Hartley Shawcross and Major Frank Soskice) were received on their appointment and Knighted.

Seven other new Knights received the accolade from the King, including Mr. A. P. Herbert, M.P., and Mr. Lewis Casson, husband of Dame Sybil Thorndike.

FUNERAL

MR. FERGUS O'NOLAN

The funeral of Mr. Fergus O'Nolan, M.A., Chilham House, Rathfarnham, late of the Land Commission, took place to Mount Jerome Cemetery following Requiem Mass at the Church of the Annunciation, Rathfarnham, celebrated by the Rev. J. Alston, C.C.

The chief mourners were: Mrs. Emilie O'Nolan (widow), Miss Maire O'Nolan, M.A. (daughter), Mr. G. Nolan (son), the Rev. P. L. O'Nolan, O.Carm. (brother); Mrs. A. O'Nolan (sister-in-law), Messrs. C. O'Nolan, B.A.; B. O'Nolan, M.A.; K. O'Nolan, B.A. (nephews); Misses Neasa, Nuala, Sheila O'Nolan (nieces); Mrs. F. Lynam and Miss N. Lynam (relatives).

By Myles na gCopaleen

THE commonwealth of learning is not at this time without master builders, whose mighty designs in advancing the sciences will leave lasting monuments (Eire perennius?) to the admiration of posterity; but everyone must not hope to be the dish coverer of penicillin or Vergeltungsfeuer; and in any age that produces such marvels as peerless radar or the O'Tomic Bomb, it is ambition enough to be employed as an under-labourer in clearing the ground a little and removing some of the rubbish that lies in the way of knowledge. Knowledge indeed had been much more advanced in the world if the endeavours of ingenious and industrious men had not been much cumbered with the learned but frivolous use of uncouth, affected or unintelligible terms, introduced into the sciences and there made an art of—so that science, which is nothing but idealism, id est the calm pursuit of annihilation, was thought unfit, or incapable to be brought into well-bred company and polite conversation. Vague and insignificant forms of speech, and abuse of language—I say nothing of abusive language!—have so long passed for mysteries of science; and hard and misapplied words, with little or no meaning, have, by prescription, such a right to be mistaken for deep learning that it will not be easy to persuade those who use them and those who hear them that such words are but the covers of ignorance and the ensigns of vanity. To break in upon the sanctuary of folly and malice will I must suppose, be considered a tactless trespass by all who have at heart the interests of the powers of evil, and, indeed, I have been told by the bookseller that many of my works have by some been condemned without reading, simply because they came from my hand! But let not the reader imagine, from this, that I can thus be persuaded to withhold from the race of my adaption (viz. the Guinness Hobo, pardon me the genus homo) aught of my discoveries which have as their unique object—and so lame!—the amelioration of humanity's lot. (Of my other discoveries, not a word!)

Thus it is that to-day I devote my discourse to a short consideration of a theory issued so many years ago (Leipsic, 1688) that it were affectation in me to refer to it by any name other than that by which the scientific world knows it. I am, of course, as the reader will by now have realised, speaking of Copaleen's Law, or the "Law of Unilateral Responsibility in War." The law was, obviously, evolved from the study of this 'world's' history which even now keeps me tied to this bath, Char, sorry, bath-chair. It has been enforced, with varying degrees of severity throughout the civilised (the European) world for the last four or five hundred years and it will, perhaps, be of interest to note that it has never been regarded with such reverence as at the present time, when it is constantly invoked to sanctify trials of war criminals. The whole theory is best summarised in the axiom: "It takes one to make a fight," or "One wrong makes a right," and in the clearly-expressed belief that the most heinous and most inhuman war crime is to lose the war. Built upon this strong rock is the conviction that the human race is not merely worthy of extermination but capable of it; and—idealistic overtone of the whole angelic philosophy!—that there will not be another war. I quote, smiling tenderly, the words of our great orthodox rival, the Dublin Time: "The chances are, however, that with the elimination of the war lords who have been the origin of her glory and of her destruction, she will cease to indulge her dreams of domination and will resume—with variations—her long tradition of quiet industry . . . . ." Hmmm. The only other case I can think of where you had quiet industry and cessation from indulgence in dreams of Dom Ignatian was in . . . . . ha ha ha . . . . Victorian England.

AN IRISHMAN'S DIARY

"Algol's" Verse

A LITTLE book of verse reached me the other day, recalling many memories. It is a reprint of poems, nearly all of them in light vein, published from time to time in Punch and other periodicals by "Agol," my friend the late C. H. Bretherton, who died in London a few years ago.

The book, which is printed on beautiful paper, hard to come by in these stringent times, is published by Frederick Muller, and edited by Paul Bretherton, son of the late writer. So far as I can remember, the last time I saw Master Paul was one summer's day in the garden of his parents' house in Bray, where his father had built a miniature railway to the great delight of his youthful offspring. In the meanwhile said offspring has grown up. Before the war Paul Bretherton was one of the rising stars of the Daily Mail, which he represented for some time in Berlin. He has much of his brilliant father's journalistic talent, and, being still a very young man, ought to go far in Fleet street.

"C.H.B."

Cyril Bretherton was a remarkably versatile man. While he was at the height of his journalistic power, there was a famous amateur golfer in England named Carl Bretherton; and nothing used to annoy poor Cyril more than to be confused—as he constantly was being confused—with his sporting namesake.

Bretherton's light verse, of which the present volume contains a fair selection, was as good as any that was written in England since the days of Calverley, to whose shade, by the way, the book is dedicated. Curiously enough, the book contains nothing of the contributions which the poet made to the columns of the Irish Times during the three or four years when he was a member of the staff in Dublin. He used to write leading articles, which rarely, if ever, conformed to the rigid stylistic canons of the late John Healy, who was Editor in those days; and I often thought that he used to hang his participles deliberately in order to enjoy the spectacle of Healy's classical disgust!

Thoughts and Theories

But it was not as a leader-writer that Bretherton excelled. He contributed a weekly feature entitled, "Thoughts and Theories," which contained much of his best and most highly polished work, both in verse and in prose. He had an exceedingly subtle sense of the ridiculous; and, although his editors always had to keep their eyes skinned against possible breaches of the law of libel, his stuff invariably made exciting reading.

During his sojourn in Ireland he became famous — or notorious; it depended on the reader's political opinions—by reason of his daily dispatches to the now defunct Morning Post describing, in lurid detail, the progress of the "troubles" in this country. Personally, I never could understand how it was that he was not shot; and as I used to play a fair amount of golf with him, and drive around in his preposterous little G.N. car, which was driven by chains and made a noise like a modern bulldozer, I had more than an academic interest in his safety!

In Ireland

Although he was an exceedingly patriotic Englishman (who was married to an Irish wife), and came back from the United States to join the Artists' Rifles on the outbreak of war in 1914, he chanced to be an American citizen—a fact which may have had some influence on the policy towards him of the "competent authorities" of the I.R.A. At any rate, he never was attacked; but at one period, the American newspaper with which he corresponded (it may have been the Chicago Tribune) decided that a temporary change of air would improve Cyril's health, and he went on a six weeks' trip to the Baltic.

While he was in Scandinavia he was responsible for what amounted almost to an international incident as a result of one of his articles either in the Morning Post or in the American newspaper — I forget which. Describing a banquet which he attended as a guest in Stockholm, he drew an excruciatingly funny picture of himself and his fellow-guests swimming home to their hotels from the feast, and pushing the buildings — including Stockholm's famous Town Hall—out of their way as they swam through a fog of alcohol! It really was most amusing stuff; but the Swedes did not think so, with the result that poor "C.H.B." found himself in even hotter water than that in which he had been operating for so long in Dublin.

In the Train

I never knew anybody who had greater powers of journalistic concentration. He could work in any circumstances, thumping away at his battered typewriter, and completely oblivious of his surroundings, whatever they might happen to be. When he died Punch said of him: "He caused daily consternation in a morning carriage between Oxford and Paddington by balancing a typewriter on his knees and beating out a set of verses, after which he combed an armful of the day's papers for material for the leader he would write on arrival at his office. If the verses were not finished by Reading, he considered it a bad morning, yet they always bore the apparent polish of long hours of work. He carried a typewriter as other men carried an umbrella. His contempt for the artistic temperament in its grosser forms was unbounded. To him writing was a job, and not even pneumatic drills would break into his concentration."

Registrar-General

My old friend, George North, has been at it again! It is not so very long ago since I read of his promotion to the post of Principal Assistant Secretary to the Ministry of Health in Great Britain, and now I see that the King has approved his appointment as Registrar-General, in succession to Sir Sylvanus Vivian, who will retire at the end of next month.

Can nothing be done to hold these Trinity men down? The post of Registrar-General in England might be described as a whale of a job. The appointment is made under the Great Seal of England, and bears the King's signature, or "sign manual," as it is called. Mr. North now is head of a highly important department in His Majesty's Government. There has been no census since 1931, and all sorts of other population problems fall into the Registrar-General's competence. Mr. North, so far as I can discover, not only is the first Trinity man, but also the first Irishman, to hold this high appointment.

Trinity Abu!

George North has had an interesting career. After Trinity, he saw active service from 1916 to 1919, when he was on the Rhine. He enlisted as a gunner in Grafton street, became a Major in the Royal Artillery, having won the M.C. in 1917 as a second "loot." He was secretary to Susan Lawrence in the second Labour Government in England, also has been secretary to various Royal Commissions and Committees, as well as of the National Radium Trust (1931-1937).

Shortly before the war he became Director of Public Relations and Assistant Secretary at the Ministry of Health. As Principal Assistant Secretary he was chiefly responsible for the Government's White Paper last year on "A National Water Policy," as well as for the preparation this year of the Water Act, described on all sides as the most important and comprehensive water legislation in the past hundred years.

Now, like Moses in his day and generation, Mr. North (one of these days we shall be calling him Sir North, as the continentals speak of "Sir Churchill"!) will be called upon to number the people. His water record also suggests an analogy with the ancient law giver, so we may be prepared to welcome the bold George to Dublin one of these days wearing a flowing beard!

Back from Germany

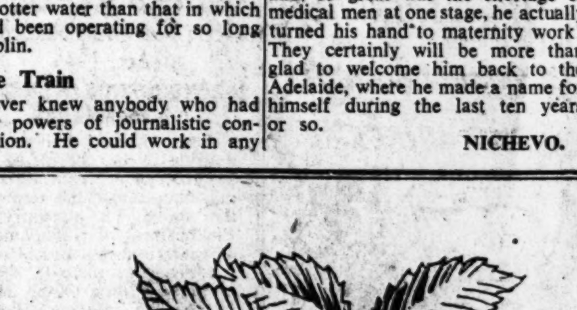

I see that two of my medical friends are back in Dublin again after several months' hard work on the Continent. One is Bob Collis—more properly Dr. W. R. F. Collis, Cambridge graduate and ex-Rugby International—and the other "Nig" Kinnear—otherwise Surgeon Nigel Kinnear, of the Adelaide Hospital.

Both of them have been in Germany, and, by a strange coincidence, they both were working at the same time in, or near, the infamous Belsen Concentration Camp. Dr. Collis's description of his experiences in this camp already has appeared in the British Medical Journal, and created widespread interest throughout the British Commonwealth and the United States.

In Dublin Dr. Collis is well known for his great work on behalf of the slum-dwellers. His moving play, "Marrowbone Lane," has done much to awaken the consciences of Dublin folk and to remind them of the appalling conditions among which the poor of this city live; and I am glad to say that the Marrowbone Lane Fund is meeting with gratifying success.

Nigel Kinnear is one of Ireland's most skilful and up-to-date surgeons. While he was in Germany he did not have much opportunity for surgical work. But he helped to fight a few outbreaks of typhus, and, so great was the shortage of medical men at one stage, he actually turned his hand to maternity work! They certainly will be more than glad to welcome him back to the Adelaide, where he made a name for himself during the last ten years or so.

Thornton Surrenders Without A Fight

THE British heavy-weight champion, Bruce Woodcock, had an easy task in disposing of Martin Thornton, the Irish title-holder, at the Theatre Royal last night, Thornton retiring at the end of the third round. In all respects, it was an inglorious display by the Irishman.

Instead of the do-or-die attack which everyone expected — which would have been thrilling, even if it had failed — Thornton was, apparently, so paralysed with nerves that he could do nothing, not even defend himself.

He came out of his corner with his chin tucked right down behind his left shoulder, but that did not save him after the first round, for Woodcock—seeing that he was not going to run into trouble—brought over his right with effect which could be clearly seen in Thornton's face.

NO REACTION

The first round was almost static, but in the second Woodcock began to get to work, and, leading with the left, he did the damage with right crosses to the face. To everyone's amazement, there was no reaction from the Irishman.

For a second or two at the start of the second round he shaped like bringing over his right, but nothing came of it, and the protection of his chin seemed to be his dominant idea.

All through the third round Woodcock just did as he liked, and played a tattoo on the left side of Thornton's face, closing his eye and cutting his cheek.

Thornton took a good deal of punishment without any reply, but he looked to be far from out at the bell, shortly after which the towel was thrown in.

WASTED NO PUNCHES

It was difficult to judge Woodcock's capabilities. He certainly punches more accurately and coolly than the average heavy-weight, but his defence looked rather open—possibly, on this occasion, because he was plainly on top.

He did not waste many punches, and Thornton's face looked battered at the end of the third round; but the crowd voiced their disappointment at the inability of their countryman to launch even one all-out attack.

COLLINS'S GAME SHOW

Jimmy Webster, who is regarded as a coming British champion, knocked out Joe Collins, the Dublin bantam-weight in the 7th round, but the local lad put up a splendid show before going down to a far stronger hitter.

For the first five rounds, Collins had a definite lead on points, but even though he hit Webster as hard as he could with both hands, he could make no impression on the Londoner. Right from the start, Collins was beating his man to the lead, and, with his left working crisply, he had openings for the right hook.

Webster, however, showed a sign of what was to come when, midway through the second round, he cut loose and damaged Collins, especially to the body.

Still, it was Collins all the way to the end of the fifth, and then came the change. From the bell at the 6th, Webster pinned Collins to the ropes, and, with a succession of fierce punches, had him helpless. Collins went down for 9, and the barrage continued when he got up. Down for 8, he came back pluckily, but only the bell saved him.

Webster got to work at the start of the 7th, and, warding off a last desperate rally by Collins, ended it with a perfect right cross to the jaw.

McCORMACK WINS

Spike McCormack's victory on points over Paddy Lyons, the Northern England middle-weight champion was a disappointing affair. The Irish champion looked somewhat unfit, yet he has a remarkable fighting spirit, and, after losing the first three rounds, he came back to get the better of an endless series of wrestling bouts at close quarters.

Lyons was terribly slow, and had no idea of how to time a punch at long range. McCormack, nothing like as good as he was a couple of years ago, was equally at fault in this respect, and it was a question of which of them could hit the harder at close quarters. That man was McCormack, and he also connected with a few "haymakers" as he came in, but it was a drab affair, and fell a long way below expectations. Lyons started well, but in the last few rounds he was even more weary than his opponent.

CHAMPION BEATEN

John Ingle took the Eire light-weight title from Jimmy Smith on points in a contest which can only be described as uneventful. Ingle is faster about the ring now than when these two last met, but he is very crude, and has no idea of how to punch at close quarters.

Smith is still a past master in defence, and for eleven rounds he ducked, side-stepped and rode the punches, but his own attack is now negligible, and he landed very few punches of any consequence until the last round, when it was too late.

Ingle tried all he knew for a decisive punch, but he simply could not land one, and so it went for round after round, with the Dublin lad the attacker. Smith, who had an eye cut early on, made a plucky effort in the last round, but he could not really worry Ingle. If the latter could only time his punches he might be good, but he still has a lot to learn.

The better timing of his punches went a long way towards Jimmy Ingle's decisive points victory over Tommy Davies, the Welsh middle-weight champion, in a rather scrappy fight. Davies started off well, his greater activity at close quarters telling in the earlier rounds, but before long Ingle's heavy punching to head and body, including a few exceptionally hard right leads and crosses, began to wear him down.

Towards the end he was loosing his punches rather wildly, and Ingle was not unduly troubled to keep out of the way of most of them.

Though failing to press his advantages home to the full at times, Ingle ended an obvious winner.

PATERSON BEATEN

At the Brighton Dome last night, in a bantam-weight contest, Gus Foran (Liverpool) beat Jackie Paterson (Scotland), the world's fly-weight champion. Foran thoroughly deserved the verdict, for he was handicapped by a badly cut left eye in the third round.

MILLS' CHALLENGE

BEFORE the start of the big fight, Ted Broadribb, manager of Freddie Mills, challenged the winner, on behalf of his man, for a bout in Dublin.

HOMER NODS, DALY REGAINS GOLF CUP

By J. P. ROONEY

FOR the second time in six years, the Willie Nolan Memorial Cup has gone North. Yesterday, at Portmarnock, Fred Daly, who was with the City of Derry Club when he won it at Little Island, Cork, brought the trophy to Balmoral, beating the Portmarnock man, Eddie Hackett, by three strokes, with Christy Kane, still unattached, a good third, four strokes behind the winner.

From the back tees, with a fairly strong breeze, the links was playing extra long, but still for professionals the scoring generally was on the high side. As a matter of fact, Daly, with 71 in the morning, was the only one to beat bogey (75), while Hackett and Kane, with 75, alone stood up to the Colonel on the second 18.

The holder for four years, Harry Bradshaw, had one of his rare off days with rounds of 79 and 77.

Daly had a great first nine of 33 (4 under bogey), with "birdies" at the 1st, 4th, 6th and 8th. He was hitting the ball beautifully, and had not a 5 until he reached the 13th. He also had a "birdie" at the 17th, and led the field with 71.

On his second round of 76 he had 5's at the 13th, 15th and 18th, but 4's at the 14th, 16th and 17th. Hackett played very consistently for his two 75's, but three bunkers on his opening round were the results of bad luck rather than slack shots. The course was in wonderful condition.

The prize money was £110, including £70 put up by the club, and at the presentation of the prizes the captain, Mr. E. Spratt, paid a glowing tribute to the memory of Willie Nolan.

His rounds were 74, 77, 76, 74. It was a fighting round, in atrocious conditions, which gave him a four strokes advantage over Percy Alliss and Arthur Havers, who shared second place at 305.

DANTE NOT TO RUN

THE bookmakers who have so persistently offered to lay against Dante for the St. Leger during the past few days have proved to be justified. After a consultation yesterday between his owner, Sir Eric Ohlson, and trainer, Mat Peacock, it was decided that it would be impossible to get the horse fit in time and to scratch him from the race.

Dunboy Looks A Likely Winner At Phœnix Park

By Our Racing Correspondent

TO-DAY'S Blake Plate at Phœnix Park promises to be unusually interesting, as the field will include Dunboy, Linaria and Lonesome Trail, who met in the Fifteen Hundred a fortnight ago, when Dunboy finished a good fourth, Linaria being sixth. They will be opposed by, among others, Three Rock, who deputises for Imaal; the newcomer, Bright News, and Gaiter.

Gaiter, who was the medium of heavy support at Leopardstown, ran much below home form on that occasion, and might cause a surprise this afternoon. Linaria was well beaten in the Fifteen Hundred some distance from home, and it is possible that the going had something to do with her poor display. She is entitled to another chance. However, I prefer Dunboy, who has plenty of speed.

A stable companion of Linaria, Dulcinea, may prove the best of those engaged in the first of the seasons nurserys, the Sandyford Plate; while, in the Swords Plate, I take Spam to win from Middle East.

Mr. Myerscough will probably saddle the winner of the opening event with Ravish or Gaiter; and I think Maxwell Arnott will supply the winner of the amateur riders' event with Knight of Annandale.

CORK WON'T TRAVEL

CORK UNITED, who have already protested against the Soccer fixture list which gives them six Saturday and two Sunday away games for the season, will fulfil their away fixture with Limerick in the Dublin City Cup, but will not travel to any further away matches unless the list is revised to their satisfaction. A resolution to this effect was passed unanimously at a special meeting of the club.

LAST-MINUTE WINNER

A goal in the last minute gave Blackrock College a surprise win over an exceptionally strong Young Leinster side that included three senior players (P. Feddis, R. Feddis and J. Murphy) in the final of the Leinster Youths' Water-polo Cup, which was the main event at the U.C.D. Gala at Blackrock Baths last night. Blackrock won by three goals (P. Nugent (two) and G. O'Neill) to two (J. Murphy and P. Feddis).

Winners were: Miss C. O'Farrell (U.C.D. Ladies' 50 metres championship), Miss C. McGuigan (U.C.D. Ladies' 50 metres handicap), J. Keane (Dalkey) (Youths' 50 metres handicap), Miss M. SOUTH AFRICAN MINES IN MORE FAVOUR

FROM OUR LONDON FINANCIAL CORRESPONDENT

IT was quite an interesting day in the Stock Markets. General business was small, as frequently happens on a Friday, but there were signs of more interest on the part of speculators. The South African Mining section showed to better advantage than for some time, with prices going gradually forward. The news that no great objections are raised by the British Treasury against British investors participating in the new South African issues has created a good impression.

WESTERN REEFS WERE A FEATURE

Strength for Chinese and Japanese Government Bonds suggested buying on a belief that the surrender of Japan will be carried through without serious obstruction. Some of the Chinese Bonds were as much as three points higher, as in the case of the 4½ p.c. 1898 Loan at 81. Gains in the Japanese list ran up to two points. The Japanese 6 p.c. Loan rose two to 28½, and the 5 p.c. 1907 one to 27. Other Eastern stocks, including Tins and Rubbers, were rather subdued, but there are expectations of revival in such sections.

Among Home stocks, British Funds remained strong. Consols 2½ p.c. advanced further to 87¾, and Locals to 97¾. Bank of England stock improved further to 373, and other English Bank shares were a good market. Further general recovery, with moderate business, was seen in Coal and Steel shares. Prices showed many gains from 3d. to 1/3 a share. Allied Iron rose 1/3 to 51/3, Babcock 1/3 to 56/3, and John Brown to 26/6.

Tobaccos, after early improvement, slipped back to about overnight levels, but the Radio shares were quite good. Cossor rose 1/9 to 42/3, and Decca 1/3 to 57/6. Breweries were rather irregular. Oils received little attention, apart from Anglo-Iranian, which advanced to 5¼.

DOG RACING PROFITS

The announcement of an increase in the interim dividends of Hackney Wick Stadium, Ltd., from 5 to 10 p.c. is another indication of the prosperity of greyhound track companies. This company became public in 1936, with dividends ranging between 17½ and 35 p.c. Last year 30 p.c. was paid out of available profits, equal to 47 p.c. on its capital of £100,000, all of which is in 1s. Ord. shares. These have a market value of 8/10½. The most important of the concerns interested in this form of popular sport is the Greyhound Racing Association Trust, which, with a capital of £1,400,000, owns race tracks in London and others at Birmingham, Portobello, and Edinburgh. It was paying dividends of 40 p.c. For the current year it resumed interim payments with 10 p.c. Its Ord. shares are quoted at about 8/-. Clapton Stadium is another successful company; its dividends have varied, ranging between 10 and 45 p.c., that for 1944 being 25 p.c.

INDIAN COPPER PAYS

TREPCA MINES SHOCK

Shareholders of the Trepca Mines, Ltd., learned yesterday that a draft law cancelling existing mining concessions in Yugo-Slavia and the nationalisation of the entire mineral wealth of that country has been proposed. The proposed draft law does not provide for expropriation of invested capital, but that this question would have to be settled later by negotiations with the owners. The company is keeping in close touch with the Foreign Office regarding its position and the protection of its assets in Yugo-Slavia. The company was formed in 1927, and began production of lead and zinc in 1930. It has an issued capital of £1,789,028 in 5/- shares. Pre-war dividends ranged between 12 and 30 p.c. No dividend has been paid in the past four years.

Brighter Trend in Markets

THERE was a modest increase in business on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday, but public interest was mostly confined to Irish securities. There was quiet buying of most of these issues, and the tendency was firmer for choice. British Industrials were not quite so lively, but the market made a steadier showing.

The Funds, both Home and British, held up well. Banks attracted a good deal of attention, and both Nationals and Provincial Old tended higher, on small buying.

Guinness units were rather out of favour, and fell away to 146/9. Distillers Ord. changed hands at 114/-. Home Rails held quietly steady, but D.U.T.C. "A" Deb. improved to 101.

Bolands Ord. advanced to 12½, and Pim Bros. Pref. gained 1/- at 15/-; but McBirney Pref. relapsed 2/- to 14/-. E. and J. Burke Deb. moved up to 10½, but Dolphin Hotel Ord. fell 1/9 to 95/-, and Associated Properties Pref. shaded off to 28/3.

Independent "B" Ord. jumped 1/- to 97/-, and J. Halliday Pref. made headway to 22/9. Solus issues were dull, and the "A" Ord. declined to 47/6, while the "B" Ord. were lowered 1/- to 47/-.

B.A.T. Ord. were fairly busy, and hardened to 128/3; but Imperial Tobacco Ord. closed several pence down at 155/1½. Dunlop Rubbers firmed up to 50/9, and Gt. Universal Stores to 29/-. Hawker Siddeley Ord. quoted 18/-, and Imperial Chemical Ord. 38/-.

ARGENTINE RAILS

It has been suggested in certain quarters that the needs of Argentina in the form of machinery and railway material far exceed the amount of the large sterling balances it holds in Britain, and that great opportunities for reciprocal trading with Britain are opening up. All this may be so, but, unfortunately, the instability of its Government and the unsatisfactory manner in which British-owned railways have been treated, give little encouragement to British capital to take the risks involved. Apart from some Debenture issues, Argentine Railway stocks are, under present conditions, little more than gambling counters standing at option prices and fluctuating on spasmodic bursts of speculative activity.

Band at Bray.—The Artane Band will give a recital at the Bandstand, Esplanade, Bray, to-morrow afternoon.

MOTORS AND RUBBERS LEAD ADVANCE

NEW YORK, Friday.—The Stock Exchange opened firm and active. The market continued its recovery during the morning, although cautiousness, based on tax and price uncertainties, persisted. Motors, Rails and selected Industrials were in the forefront, with fractional advances predominating towards midday in quieter dealings. After displaying some hesitancy, the market resumed its upward movement, advancing fractions to more than three points under the leadership of Motors and Rubbers. These two groups were spurred by the removal of production quotas for new passenger cars. Some accounts were adjusted prior to the lengthy week-end, but the market finished generally firm. Sales totalling 1,320,000 shares comprised 933 issues, of which 655 advanced, 120 declined and 158 remained unchanged.

LIBANON MINE RE-OPENING

The Libanon Mine has not yet re-opened, although market circles expect that this will not be long delayed. No comment is obtainable officially, except that the whole position is being reviewed, following the end of the war, says Reuter's Johannesburg correspondent.

After BACKACH
What a difference!
For six weeks this woman endured the pains of backache. It was wearing her out. Then she began to take Kruschen, and in three weeks, what a difference there was! But let her tell the story herself:—
"About six weeks ago, I started having awful pains in my back. Sometimes I could not straighten myself, and I got depressed and worn out. I could scarcely carry on with my household duties, and everything was getting neglected. It was then I saw a Kruschen advertisement, and I decided to give Kruschen Salts a trial. I started with a small teaspoonful in hot water every morning, and in three weeks, my word, what a difference! The pains gradually disappeared. To-day, at 46, I feel ten years younger."—(Mrs.) H.M.

TRAVEL BETWEEN EIRE AND GREAT BRITAIN

The demand for travel between Eire and Great Britain is far greater than the capacity of the cross-Channel steamers. War needs in Great Britain still make normal steamer services impossible. No passenger will be allowed on board unless in possession of a sailing ticket, issued free of charge, and a valid Passport or Travel Permit.

To ensure that sailing tickets are issued only to persons entitled to travel, Passport or Travel Permits must be obtained before application. Any applications received more than twenty-eight days in advance will not be considered. Sailing tickets are necessary for each child.

Applications must be accompanied by a stamped and plainly addressed envelope.

For journeys on or after Monday, August 27th, the number of the Passport or Travel Permit must be quoted when making application.

Any person obtaining a sailing ticket, and unable to use it, is requested to return it promptly to the Office of issue to allow of re-issue to another intending passenger.

Applications for Sailing Tickets should be made to:—

After BACKACHE— What a difference!

For six weeks this woman endured the pains of backache. It was wearing her out. Then she began to take Kruschen, and in three weeks, what a difference there was! But let her tell the story herself:—

"About six weeks ago, I started having awful pains in my back. Sometimes I could not straighten myself, and I got depressed and worn out. I could scarcely carry on with my household duties, and everything was getting neglected. It was then I saw a Kruschen advertisement, and I decided to give Kruschen Salts a trial. I started with a small teaspoonful in hot water every morning, and in three weeks, my word, what a difference! The pains gradually disappeared. To-day, at 46, I feel ten years younger."—(Mrs.) H.M.

Pains in the back are usually due to poisons in the blood—waste products which tired kidneys are failing to filter from the system. The six salts in Kruschen coax your kidneys back to healthy, normal action, so that not a particle of poisonous waste matter remains unexpelled. You experience joyous relief from those old dragging kidney pains.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable of all Chemists, price 1/9 per bottle.

SHIPPOOL HOUSE AND LANDS,
INNISHANNON, CO. CORK.
5 MILES FROM BANDON, 5 MILES FROM KINSALE, 15 MILES FROM CORK CITY, AND 1 MILE FROM INNISHANNON VILLAGE.
CONSISTING OF ABOUT 300 ACRES, WITH SPLENDID MODERN RESIDENCE,
Extensive Yards and Out-offices, good Dwellinghouse near Farmyard, 2 Gate Lodges, and Workman's House.
ALL THE PROPERTY IS FREEHOLD.

MICHAEL O'REILLY is favoured with instructions from the owner to Sell the above lovely modern Residence (built about 12 years ago), comprising entrance hall and inner hall, drawingroom, diningroom and library (oak panelled), 4 bedrooms (one has boudoir sittingroom attached), h. & c. water laid on 3 bedrooms, with built-in wardrobes; large, well-equipped bathroom, h. & c., 2 flush lavatories, box room. Drawingroom opens into large stone terrace, which commands a lovely view and runs full length of the house, about 72 ft., and approached by flight of stone steps from the gravel drive. There is a small swimming pool at one end of the terrace. A well-fitted kitchen, with range, and separate boiler for hot water, 2 pantries, 2 sculleries, and store room.

The house is most picturesquely situated, overlooking a nice park lawn of about 20 acres and the Bandon River, and is approached by two avenues, nicely wooded, with gate lodge entrance to each. Electric light throughout and telephone installed, and a well-enclosed orchard garden of about 1½ acres.

There is a good spring water supply laid on to house and yard. There is a substantial 6-roomed dwellinghouse (the steward's house) adjoining the farmyard and a splendid range of out-offices in two enclosed yards, and enclosed haggard, comprising box stables, 2 stalls for 20 cattle, separated by a feeding house, extensive lofts, with first-class flooring and roofing; in the backyard a lot of modern farm buildings, including stalls, with headfeed; also a lot of large, loose feeding houses for pedigree stock, and a large hay and straw corrugated shed, etc. There is also a workman's house on the farm.

The property will be sold preferably intact, but offers will be entertained for the residence, with lawn (20 acres), garden and about 10 acres wood, with avenue and gate lodge, as one lot. The lawn is at present let for 11 months at £40; letting expires September, 1945.

The remainder of the property is about 135 acres excellent grazing and cropping land, 125 acres woodland, and 10 acres marsh land, together with the steward's house and all valuable farm buildings, and the workman's house situated on the farm.

This is undoubtedly one of the finest residential properties in the South of Ireland. A little more than half the estate is rich grazing and cropping land, constituting a well laid-out and easily worked farm.

The remainder of the property is woodland, with the exception of about 10 acres marsh land; a very picturesque landscape, which is undulating in character, sloping down to a frontage of over one mile of the tidal portion of the Bandon River, where nice boating can be had. A large quantity of very valuable, well-matured timber, both commercial and ornamental, as well as young plantations.

There is excellent woodcock, snipe and duck shooting, as well as fishing, to be had on the property. Further extensive rough shooting and salmon fishing to be rented for a very nominal rent in the immediate neighbourhood, and in the centre of the best hunting district, where different packs of foxhounds are kept.

The Residence is a lovely 2-storey building, erected pre-war, with the very best material regardless of expense; h. & c. water and electric light throughout with telephone installed, and every modern convenience, and delightfully situated; also the steward's house and extensive range of out-offices, all in good order, and all being held free of Rent. It is a most tempting investment. Offers will be received for the entire property or in 2 lots, as described. Inspection of the House and Lands can be had by applying to the Auctioneer, and any further particulars. Immediate Possession can be given.

Offers for purchase to—
